The Marketing and International Business Department of the Zicklin School of Business of Baruch College plans to recruit a full-time faculty to start in Fall 2005 in the rank of Assistant Professor (although other ranks may be considered) with an interest in teaching the introductory course in International Business (undergraduate and graduate), Foreign Markets, Cultures and Régimes (a graduate course on the environment of international business) and, occasionally, other International-Marketing and International-Business courses, with no more than two preparations per semester. Candidates for Assistant Professor must have a PhD in a field related to international business (or plan to complete it by Fall 2005), strong research skills and the potential to publish in leading academic journals.

Candidates for Associate Professor or full Professor must have, in addition, a distinguished track record of publication in leading journals and evidence of strong teaching performance. Salary will be commensurate with qualifications and rank. Candidates nearing completion of their PhD are encouraged to apply. Such candidates, if selected, will be offered an appointment as Assistant Professor contingent on completion of the degree. If this contingency is not met prior to the start date, the appointment will revert to an instructorship. The closing date for applications is October 30, 2004.

The Zicklin School of Business is a leading publicly-funded school located in the heart of New York City. The School's academic programs include BBA, MBA, MS and PhD degrees as well as executive programs in the United States and overseas. A wide range of course offerings in International Marketing and International Business at the undergraduate and graduate levels allows for flexibility in teaching assignments. Baruch College belongs to the City University of New York which is an affirmative action/equal-opportunity employer.

The School's New York location enables it to draw on the vast economic and cultural resources of the city. It also provides opportunities for faculty to interact with practitioners from industry and with researchers at other business schools located in the New York area. The closing date for applications is October 30, 2004.
