

The International Business Department in the Moore School of Business at the University of South Carolina is conducting a search to fill two tenure-track positions beginning August, 2005. Rank is open although the preference is for entry level or junior level candidates. A completed doctoral degree with a specialization in international business (or related field) is required. We are interested in scholars with outstanding research and teaching potential. While the areas of research interests are open, we are especially interested in candidates with expertise in foreign direct investment and MNE theory, cross-border inter-organizational relationships (international alliances, international joint ventures, and cross-border mergers and acquisitions), and intra-organizational processes in MNEs (international negotiations, knowledge management, and multicultural teams).

The Moore School of Business is widely recognized for its international business programs, including an undergraduate international business major, international master in business administration (on campus and with Wirtschaftsuniversität in Vienna, Austria), a new executive global MBA program in Guadalajara, Mexico, and an international business major at the doctoral level. For the past 15 years the graduate program in international business has been ranked No. 1 or No. 2. The undergraduate international business program has been ranked No. 1 for seven consecutive years.
