ABOUT THE SCHOOL AND SMU

Singapore Management University aims to be a premier university, internationally recognized for its world class research and distinguished teaching. Incorporated in January 2000, SMU is the first private university to be established in Singapore with Singapore government funding. Its undergraduate curriculum is modeled after the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania with which it has collaboration agreements. Through the Wharton-SMU Research Center, SMU is developing exciting research programs and opportunities for research collaboration. The new campus is situated in the business and cultural heart of Singapore. SMU offers an internationally competitive compensation package including relocation benefits and funding for research and conference travel. Its Lee Kong Chian School of Business has more than 90 full-time faculty members. Information about the School and faculty can be viewed at www.smu.edu.sg.

Professor David B. Montgomery, the Sebastian S Kresge Professor of Marketing Strategy, Emeritus at the Stanford Graduate School of Business, is the Dean of the Lee Kong Chian School of Business.
