

UNIVERSITY OF READING BUSINESS SCHOOL

Reading, UK

Faculty positions in International Business and Management

The University of Reading Business School is looking to grow its faculty in both International Business Economics and International Management (including International HRM). Positions are likely to become available in the course of the academic year 2006-7 at University Lectureship (Assistant Professorship) level, current salary range £24,352- £36,959. Candidates should have or be very close to obtaining a PhD in a relevant area, with evidence of the ability to complete and publish research in top quality international journals.

The University of Reading was founded in 1926 and is one of the top 20 most research-intensive universities in the UK. It is mainly located on the beautiful 320 acre Whiteknights parkland campus, about a mile from the centre of Reading and three miles from the M4. There are excellent high-speed communications between Reading and London, with about four trains an hour and a journey time of just 25 minutes. The Business School is the University's largest academic school with about 1500 FTE students, including nearly 600 postgraduates, and 80 academic staff, including over 20 full professors. It has world class research groups in international business and a range of related areas and achieved 5 ratings in both RAE 1996 and RAE 2001.

The Reading University Business School has a long-standing research reputation in the field international business and management, which has recently been strengthened and rejuvenated by the creation of the Centre for International Business and Strategy. See www.rdg.ac.uk/business/default.asp?id=128

Once the positions have been approved, further details will be advertised in the Times Higher Education Supplement (THES), www.info.rdg.ac.uk/newjobs/list.htm and other websites. Potential candidates attending AIB 2006 in Beijing should contact Professor Klaus Meyer, k.meyer@rdg.ac.uk, or Professor Rajneesh Narula, r.narula@rdg.ac.uk, both of whom are attending the conference.