

Lecturer/Senior Lecturer/Associate Professor in International Business

Department of Management and International Business
University of Auckland Business School
New Zealand

As part of its ongoing development in International Business, The University of Auckland Business School invites applications for a tenure track faculty appointment in the area of International Business at the Lecturer / Senior Lecturer or Associate Professor level.

Applicants should have a doctoral qualification, with a proven track record of effective research and teaching. For appointment at the Associate Professor level, a distinguished record of publications and a well developed research programme would be expected. Preference will be given to applicants with expertise in Asian business and the ability to teach in both undergraduate and postgraduate classes. The ability to deliver courses on research methods at an advanced level would be welcomed.

The University of Auckland is New Zealand's largest university with 40,000 students. Accredited with the AACSB International, Equis and AMBA, The University of Auckland Business School is New Zealand's leading Business School with a strong international emphasis and a highly active global academic network. The School has a strong commitment to diversity and internationalisation and this is reflected in its staff and student profiles. The newly formed Department of Management and International Business has the equivalent of 35 full-time staff and teaches a broad range of undergraduate, graduate and executive management and international business courses.
