Ryerson is a university on the move. Many of its over 50 undergraduate and graduate programs are highly specialized, each distinguished by a professionally relevant curriculum and strong emphasis on research and creative activities. Its School of Business Management (SBM) invites applications for a full-time tenure-stream position in International Business.

SBM, currently an official candidate for AACSB accreditation, is housed in the Faculty of Business and is the largest undergraduate business school in English Canada. It offers a Bachelor of Commerce degree and as of September 2006, an MBA with a global focus, building on Ryerson’s reputation of facilitating research and collaboration between industry, faculty and students. Housed in a new state-of-the-art building on Bay Street in the financial heart of Canada, the School is increasingly perceived as innovative, dynamic and a leader of tomorrow.

The successful candidate will be expected to: (1) teach and supervise undergraduate and graduate courses in International Business; (2) supervise research projects; (3) pursue a productive research program; and (4) participate actively in the ongoing development of the School’s International Business programs. This position requires a PhD or equivalent, evidence of strong performance in the classroom and a demonstrated record of relevant published research. Managerial experience is desirable, as is expertise in a functional area of business.

All qualified candidates are encouraged to apply; however, applications of Canadian and permanent residents will be given priority.
