Job Summary

Leeds University Business School (LUBS) has built upon its rating of international excellence in the Research Assessment Exercises of 2001 and 2008, being ranked within the top 10 for research in the UK. LUBS is a full-service, research-intensive business school internationally recognised as world-class; differentiated by excellent links to other academic disciplines at Leeds, its global focus, and leading-edge practice-based education.

The International Business Division at Leeds University Business School is expanding and has global recognition for the quality of its research and teaching. Independent assessments have ranked the International Business Division as the 1st International Business centre in the world and 2nd in the world for leadership in international business research. Within the University of Leeds, the Division has been designated as a Gold Peak of Excellence for the outstanding international calibre of its research. The International Business Division (CIBUL) includes a number of leading centres and initiatives. CIBUL (http://lubswww.leeds.ac.uk/cibul/home/) is one of the world’s leading centres in International Business research, while our recently established Confucius Institute is one of only three in Europe focused on business teaching and scholarship (http://lubswww.leeds.ac.uk/cibul/confucius-institute/).

This is an exciting time to join our team of vibrant scholars within the International Business Division, which includes leading global academics in the field. You will contribute to the research profile of the Centre and our vision to expand the quantity, quality and reach of our work. You will have the ability to teach effectively at all levels, provide effective research student supervision, make a contribution to research programmes and to contribute to administration of the School and its taught programmes. You will have a PhD in Business, Economics, Management or a closely related discipline and a proven record of having successfully organised and taught modules at undergraduate and postgraduate levels.
