Professor/Associate Professor in International Business

Field of subject for the appointment: Business studies, with specialization in international business studies in emerging markets.

Job description: Main tasks will be research and teaching on all levels. The post also includes developing the field of international studies at the faculty – in particular regarding emerging markets – supervising doctoral students, further developing the Centre for International Business Studies on Emerging Markets (CIBEM): heading research groups and new projects, applying for external funding, and to develop the competence of co-workers. The development of the research environment is expected to take place in collaboration with industry and organizations – locally, regionally, nationally, and internationally.

Requirements: Doctoral degree within the field of subject business studies and demonstrated pedagogical skills. Excellent ability to carry out research and teaching in English is a requirement, as well as high interpersonal skills and experience of heading successful research projects.

Other assessment grounds: Within CIBEM research is carried out on international business regarding emerging markets, focusing mainly on marketing, but also on related fields. Therefore, research or teaching experience from these particular fields within business studies is considered as an additional qualification. Entrepreneurship is important for Linnaeus University so experience of, or an interest for, research in international business connected to entrepreneurship is thus a merit. Furthermore, demonstrated ability to obtain external funding and publish in high-ranking, international scientific journals is also a merit. The research environment enjoys support from the region: consequently demonstrated ability to collaborate with industry and organizations is an additional merit. The holder of the professorship is expected to have a high physical presence at the workplace. Willingness to settle in the Kalmar region (south-east Sweden) will be highly valued.

Relative importance of assessment grounds: Equal importance will be attached to scientific and pedagogical skills. A majority of the professors and associate professors at the faculty are men, thus female applicants are particularly welcome.

Placement: Linnaeus University, School of Business and Economics, Department of Marketing, Kalmar. Linnaeus University is a two-campus university located in Kalmar and Växjö, altogether circa 2,000 employees and 31,000 students. The School of Business and Economics holds about 180 employees and offers distinguished education programmes, as well as high-quality and internationally acknowledged research, in economics, marketing, entrepreneurship and tourism. Our programmes are characterized by high quality, an international profile and close ties to the industry. With close to 4000 full-year students we are one of Sweden’s largest business schools in terms of the number of students.

Further information: members of the CIBEM research group will be present at the AIB conference. Please contact Dr. Susanne Sandberg, susanne.sandberg@lnu.se prior to the conference to book a meeting for further information about the position.

About the CIBEM research group: http://lnu.se/research-groups/cibem---center-for-international-business-studies-on-emerging-markets?l=en

Last application date is August 11, 2014. For further inquiries about the position please contact Head of department, Prof Stefan Lagrosen, phone +4672-745 89 01, stefan.lagrosen@lnu.se, or Dean, Prof Helén Anderson, phone +4670-358 04 33, helen.anderson@lnu.se.